Muni ETF Inflows Are Beating Mutual Funds by Two-to-One in 2025

Takeaways by Bloomberg AI

- Municipal bond exchange-traded funds drew more than double the amount of cash this year compared to traditional mutual funds focused on the asset class.
- Muni ETFs have nabbed around $19.6 billion in net inflows year-to-date, compared to $8 billion for mutual funds, according to data compiled by CreditSights Inc.
- Demand for municipal-bond ETFs has grown steadily since their introduction in 2007, with their popularity attributed to factors such as lower costs and the potential for diversification.
