Bond Case Briefs

Municipal Finance Law Since 1971

- Ed. Note: We'll be off next week as: a) Nothing will be happening; and 2) We'll be busy trampling Walmart shoppers underfoot in order to score a My Little Pony Horse Rendering Plant.
- Bloomberg: Barclays Sees 2027 Muni Bond Supply Reaching Up to $600 Billion
- S&P U.S. Brief: Converging Pressures In 2026 Test U.S. Public Finance Issuers' Creditworthiness
- S&P U.S. Mortgage Revenue Bond Program Medians: Strong Demand, Record Issuances Bolster Credit Quality And Stability
- Fitch: Ability to Withstand Cyber Threats to Differentiate Credits in AI Era
- Google-Tied Muni Deals Delayed Due to Lackluster Demand.
- Texas Stays Anti-Tax as Voters Reject Billions in Muni Bonds.
- Article for Florida practitioners here.
- And Finally, Newark: The Lower Intestine of North America is brought to us this week by Wilson v. City of Newark, in which a 13-foot-6-inch tractor trailer encountered a 12-foot-2-inch underpass. We ran the numbers. Something's gotta give. Our money's on the underpass. And yea, verily, it came to pass. The tractor trailer wedged itself under the bridge, where it remains to this day. We would have purchased a ticket to that show. The genuinely odd thing is that the warning sign had already been replaced four times. Why such a demand for a low underpants warning sign? Highway 6 in Nevada has a mile marker 68.9 sign, designed to prevent theft. Really. No one warned me. Completely unprepared. I'm wearing the double take-induced neck brace. Where it remains to this day.

Copyright © 2026 Bond Case Briefs | bondcasebriefs.com