Tax Code Constraints Limit Tribal Tax-Exempt Bonding.

Legal barriers may contribute to tribal governments' lower usage of tax-exempt bonds

Tax-exempt municipal¹ bonds play an important role in financing the construction of public purpose projects and supporting private development across the country. For a given level of risk, tax-exempt debt can offer a lower cost of capital than financing the same project using taxable debt.² Tribal governments, however, face both legal and debt service barriers to using this important financing mechanism available to state and local governments. These barriers can create challenges for tribes seeking to access the half-trillion-dollar annual tax-exempt municipal bond market for low-cost capital financing.

As part of our mission to advance the economic self-determination and prosperity of Native nations and Indigenous communities, the Center for Indian Country Development provides research and analysis on factors influencing access to capital in Native communities. To shed light on the barriers to tribes using tax-exempt bonding, we review the legal framework governing tribal tax-exempt bonding authority. We also provide an analysis of per capita tax-exempt bond financing. Our analysis spans 2003–2010—the most recent years for which both tribal-specific bond data are publicly available from the U.S. Department of the Treasury (Treasury) and annual municipal bond data are available from the Internal Revenue Service (IRS).

After accounting for differences in the target populations of both tribal governments and municipalities, we find that from 2003–2010, tribal governments' use of tax-exempt bonds falls below that of state and local governments. We also explore tribal-specific factors that may explain why we observe this large capital gap. More tribal tax-exempt bond data are needed to extend this analysis to recent years.
