- And Finally, Clear and Present Pre-Existing Condition is brought to us this week by Arias v. County of Bergen, in which “On April 24, 2021, plaintiff Andris Arias fell into a pothole on a paved pedestrian path while rollerblading in Van Saun Park. Arias asserts that her fall caused a permanent and debilitating neurological condition (complex regional pain syndrome), as well as spinal injuries requiring surgery.” Uh, are we sure about the causation here, as it has always been our understanding that rollerblading in public occurs only when one has previously experienced a, “permanent and debilitating neurological condition” and is a sure sign of such. While public rollerblading in now is likely out of the question, let’s hope she soon recovers, so that she can pursue her other avocation as a public mime.
