S&P: U.S. Infrastructure Funding: How Insurance Companies and the Private Sector Could Bridge the Gap.

The U.S. infrastructure spending gap stands at a whopping $200 billion per year. Traditional funding sources, such as state and local governments, are no longer in a position to help. But Standard & Poor's believes insurance company pension funds and private sector investment could spur significant funding capacity. In this CreditMatters TV segment, Senior Managing Director Jay Dhru discusses the possibilities.
