

Bond Case Briefs

Municipal Finance Law Since 1971

An Oregon City Banned Natural Gas. The Gas Company Fought Back.

Eugene's ordinance restricting gas hookups in new construction was set to be the state's first — until a local utility and its allies launched a $1 million counterattack.

In February, when the city council in Eugene, Oregon, passed an ordinance banning natural gas hookups in new low-rise construction, local environmental groups cheered. This was a chance for the college town to take a step toward reducing carbon emissions, help support the state's climate action plan and make history as the first city in Oregon to pass such a law.

Mayor Lucy Vinis pushed for legislators to support the ordinance, which prevailed in a 5-3 vote. "There will be some joy in the community tonight," she said.

Now Eugene's ban is making news for another reason, after allies of Portland-based utility company NW Natural launched a rapid-response campaign to force a public vote undoing the legislation. The firm spent roughly $1 million to bankroll Eugene for Energy Choice, a group opposing the ban that started collecting signatures for a referendum just weeks after the council's action. Eugene voters are likely to decide on the ordinance's fate via a ballot measure in November.

Continue reading.

Bloomberg CityLab

By Patrick Sisson

April 25, 2023

Copyright © 2024 Bond Case Briefs | bondcasebriefs.com