

Bond Case Briefs

Municipal Finance Law Since 1971

---

- SEC Probes Cyberattack of Detroit Suburb's \$30 Million Bond Sale.
- Interest Costs Could Eat Into City, State Budgets If Tax Exemption Is Axed.
- Elite Colleges in Trump's Crosshairs Rush to Bond Market at Record Pace.
- Risk Management and the Bond Credit Rating Evolution: CDFA Webcast
- A Bay Area City Pioneers Urban-Scale Insurance for Climate Disasters.
- New Jersey blast from the (not too recent) past concerning robo-setting of VRDOs here. Case brought on the standard-issue grounds and dismissed on the standard-issue grounds.
- Texas case concerning grandfathering of bond and tax credit approvals for a project built 10 years after the initial approvals here.
- 4 Keys to the Future of Public Finance with Microsoft 365 Copilot for Finance.
- And Finally, No Good Deed Goes Unpunished (Yet Again) is brought to us this week by Usry v. City of Sandersville, in which two sanitation workers had taken the "boom truck" out to pick up yard debris. They parked the truck and got out to "collect a small amount of yard waste." No idea why the opinion specifies that it was a small amount. Factors not at all in the decision and doesn't particularly paint a picture. Anyhoo, as the trucked was parked - with its lights flashing - an SUV slammed into its backside, "without braking or even slowing prior to impact." Mom was seriously injured and lost consciousness. The three y/o in her car seat was undoubtedly a bit - literally and figuratively - shaken. And likely stirred. (And also just fine.) The two sanitation workers pulled both mom and daughter from what was by then an SUV increasingly engulfed in flames. Mom's thanks for their heroism? You guessed it - lawsuit. Investigators were at a complete loss as to why mum didn't see the enormous truck, but did throw her a bone by suggesting that the sun might have been in her eyes. Goddamn sun! What's it ever done for us?